Warning: Santa May Appear at Your Desk

There is a particular kind of energy that moves through an office the moment someone spots a man in a red suit walking past the meeting room windows. Phones come out, chairs swivel, and for a few minutes nobody remembers what the quarterly report was about. It is a small thing, really, and yet it changes the whole feel of the day. That is why more companies are choosing to hire a Santa to visit the workplace during working hours, and honestly, it might be one of the loveliest surprises you can give a team in December.

The idea is simple and rather good fun. Instead of waiting for the Christmas party at the end of the year, you bring a bit of the magic forward and drop it straight into an ordinary Tuesday afternoon. Santa turns up unannounced, wanders the office, stops for a chat by the coffee machine, and hands out gifts or chocolates to everyone he meets. Some teams love it when he pops his head into a meeting just long enough for a laugh and a round of applause before he moves on, leaving people a little brighter than they were five minutes earlier.

For the person organising it all, the appeal goes well beyond a nice photo for the group chat. A surprise visit breaks up the working day in a way people actually remember, and it says something warm about how the business feels about its people, without costing anywhere near what a full staff party would.

The nice thing is how little planning it takes on your end. We arrange a fully costumed, DBS-checked Santa who knows how to read a room, whether that calls for a quiet word at someone's desk or a bit of gentle showmanship for the whole team. Timing fits around your day, and you can provide gifts that tailored to suit your team.

If your office could do with a moment of unexpected joy this December, a visit from Santa might just be the thing people are still talking about long after the tinsel comes down.

Did you Know....

Weetabix once created the world's fastest milk float.

In 2014 it reached 84.5 mph, powered by a V8 engine and complete with a flamethrower.

Apparently, two Weetabix really can get you moving. 🤖

FACTOR OR ABSOLUTE NONSENSE?

Which one of these is made up?

- A. Octopuses have three hearts. 🐙
- B. Bananas are berries, but strawberries aren't. 🍌🍓
- C. Goldfish only have a three-second memory. 🐟

One is nonsense. Can you spot it?
