Ideas to reduce your work stress in December

There's a special kind of tiredness that comes ten minutes before December with autumn in full swing. Summer holidays are a distant memory, annual targets still need to be met, and the calendar is filling up with Christmas events and end-of-year reports.

It's no surprise many businesses feel the pressure at this time of year. Workloads are earlier, decisions need to be made and small tasks quickly add up. The good news is, there are simple ways to make December a little smoother.

Delegation is a game changer. Many experienced managers keep doing tasks because it's easier than explaining them. But taking a few minutes to pass on work can save hours later – and gives your team valuable experience.

Planning makes a huge difference too. Anything you can put in place in October or November, from booking suppliers to finalising cover, means fewer last-minute fires to deal with in December.

And you don't have to do it all yourself. Consider where you could bring in extra support, whether that's a colleague, a supplier or a few additional people for a busy day or two.

Just ten minutes now, before the year slips away, could make December feel that little bit easier.

Could you do one of these things to make December a little bit easier?

- ☐ Choose one recurring task, meeting or report and take it off your list for the rest of the year.
- ☐ Pass on a job to someone less experienced and give a quick explanation.
- ☐ Plan ahead – go through November and December and note what can be dealt with now.
- ☐ Book key suppliers early so you're not rushing later.
- ☐ Check where you might need extra support, from colleagues, suppliers or a few additional people.
- ☐ Look at any old processes or reports that are no longer useful and remove them.
- ☐ Take 10 minutes to tidy your inbox and prioritise what really needs your attention.
- ☐ Make a plan for the last few weeks of the year so you can go into December feeling prepared.

CASE STUDY - TANGO

Turbo Tango Is Back, And We Helped Bring the Buzz

Fifty crowd talent helped create an unforgettable launch at Gorilla, Manchester.

When Turbo Tango, the cult aerosol soft drink that Millennials never stopped talking about, made its ultra-limited comeback this September, the first chance to get a can came at a launch party at Gorilla in Manchester.

Our client needed the room to feel alive the moment doors opened, so we supplied fifty crowd talent, a genuine mix of ages eighteen to thirty and a real spread of race and gender, to help get that energy going.

Dressed casually and briefed to blend in rather than stand out, our team queued early, worked the room and threw themselves into the activations, from the Batak reaction game and claw grabber to the 360 glambot and dancing along to the DJ. They were there to enhance the public, not replace them, giving genuine attendees something to feed off as the venue filled up.

With filming happening throughout for Tango's own social channels, every bit of that early energy became part of the content itself.

The result was a launch that felt exactly like what it was meant to be, a nostalgic favourite landing all over again with old fans and new ones alike, and a client who never had to worry about a flat start.

Did you know we do that too? 🙄

Ever wondered where the name ALDI comes from?

It's a combination of Albrecht + Discount. The Albrecht family grew a small German store into a supermarket chain, with the first UK Aldi opening in 1990.
